

Agressive Periodontitis and Orthodontic Treatment

Ivo Dřížhal, Zdeněk Hofman, Uve Engels

Authors demonstrate collaboration of periodontologist and orthodontist in the treatment of aggressive periodontitis on 3 cases. Team collaboration is still not common in our dental surgeries. To develop well working team – it means to have empathy to understand the different topics and also to introduce my subject for other members of team.

Demonstrated cases are opening the way for a less usual treatment plan which is giving surprisingly nice esthetic results. The problem is in selection of patients, because the longterm perfect collaboration is mandatory. Also the financial aspect is limitation.

The paper would like to focus on the possibility to explore the progress in dental specialities for treatment of our patients, especially for the group looking for high standard.

We would like to stress that this type of treatment is lasting not many months but years. The results are positive.